

Can't Afford A Lawyer? That's Fine, This Is Better AND More Affordable

Let's start with a sobering fact. Most people can't afford a lawyer.

The average lawyer charges up to $400 per hour (1). Whether you're heading into a long legal fight or just have a few questions, it's going to cost you at least hundreds if not thousands. It has become a privilege reserved for the one-percent.

For the other 99? Basically, it means bankruptcy.

Problem Is, Everyone Runs Into Legal Trouble At Some Point

Whether it's divorce and child custody, a landlord dispute or business problems, there are hundreds of complex situations in which a lawyer's expertise is crucial (2). And, unless you're a professional lawyer yourself, you'll need help as soon as possible to achieve the best outcome in the long run.

The worst part is it's not just money that will stand in the way of having your legal questions expertly answered. Actually finding the ideal lawyer for your circumstances isn't as easy as it sounds, with multiple internet searches, phone calls and meetings guaranteed to consume your time and cause unnecessary stress.

I wish I could talk to a real lawyer without burning through my savings in a couple of weeks.

Here's a little secret: YOU CAN!

It's easy to think coughing up a few hundred bucks for an hour of a lawyer's time is the only way to get your legal questions legitimately (and quickly) answered, but this couldn't be further from the truth.
